Questions

1. What is the primary goal of your email campaign, and how will you measure its success?

   The primary objective of this email campaign is to stimulate immediate sales during the Black Friday event by providing exclusive discounts. The success of the campaign will be evaluated using key performance indicators (KPIs), including open rates, click-to-open rates (CTOR), and bounce rates. These metrics will help determine the number of recipients who proceed to make a purchase as a result of the email outreach.

2. How will you create a sense of urgency in your email to encourage immediate action?

   I will ensure that I create a sense of urgency by using phrases such as "limited-time offer" and including a period of grand sales such as “from the 20th to the 21st as well as including how big of sales will be available for example “80% off selected items” there will be selected items previewed on the email for the recipient to view and be attracted.

3. What visual elements will you include to make your email appealing and on-brand?

   I will use bright brand colours because as much as the colours should be loud and attractive they need to be easy to identify with the brand. My images will need to be relevant to the sale and need to be high quality images that attract and resonate with the recipient. The images and texts will need to balance with white space for clear and understandable reading, CTA buttons will also be colourful and align with the brand’s colours.

4. How will you use curiosity to encourage customers to complete their purchase?

   My strategy will be to add a mystery box for customers to stand a chance of winning. The mystery box could land on anyone who spends over a specific amount during black Friday sales e.g. “spend R500 or more stand a chance of winning a mystery box in selected items that could be worth R200 000 worth of cash prizes”.

5. What clear call-to-action (CTA) will you use, and how will it be positioned in your email?

   I will strategically place the “Shop Now” button at the top of my email and ensure that it is bold, bright and hard to miss, I will also have another “Shop now” button at the end of my texts, this shows and highlights that shopping is the main purpose and making easy for the customers to get to it will tempt the customer to click and shop.

6. How will the design of the email support the sales strategy?

   The design of the email will be clear and bright, CTA will be easy to get to and high quality images will be easily accessible, all the information about the Sale will be throughout the email, for the recipient to have an easy understanding of the email and have it easy to navigate around, with the possibility of scoring even bigger the possibility of winning a mystery box it is enough to be tempt the recipient to make an immediate purchase .
